THE POWER OF SEXISM

The emergence of sexuality in the teen and early adult years is confusing for all of us. For women, the situation is complicated by their position on the victim end of sexism. Many young women, myself included, enter this period with a belief that men and women are equal, and that their wishes regarding their own bodies will be generally respected by others. It is a shock to find out that this is not true.

In my late teens, I slept over at the house of a very close friend. In my innocence, I thought nothing of sleeping with friends — friends often have sleepovers. This friend was male, and I believed that my explicitly stated wish to remain platonic would be respected. After all, four years of friendship builds trust.

I awoke in the middle of a sexual act to which I had not consented. When I told my friends I was raped, they said that couldn't be true because he was a friend and I was sleeping at his house. I must have "asked for it."

Our society repeatedly confuses innocence with agency in the case of rape victims. Men confuse refusal with flirting. All young men need to be taught to ask explicitly for what they want in a sexual encounter, and wait for an obvious verbal or physical "yes." They have a responsibility to be aware of the power sexism gives them over women.

My male friend had to learn the hard way, by victimizing me. Since I spoke up, he learned to be more respectful of women's boundaries. We remained friends.

To all victims of sexual assault everywhere:

Trust yourself. Only you know what you wanted, how far you were willing to go, and where your partner/ perpetrator crossed the line into nonconsensual acts. Being unwilling or unable to prosecute your attacker does not change the accuracy of the label "rape."

It is never your fault if you engage in "risky behaviors" because you believe the world is a safer place than it actually is. Instead of "learning our place" as women in this society (i.e., don't get drunk at parties, don't wear revealing clothes, don't go into private spaces with men, etc.), we should be expecting our boys/ men to learn how to make this a safer world for everyone.

REST HAVEN CELL-OUT

Rest Haven Memorial Park is currently courting a new occupant for the park, a 115-foot AT&T cell tower, disguised as a tree.

Last week, a sorrowing mother was waiting at the canopy of burial to bury her deceased son, not 300 feet from the proposed cell tower site, yet had not been informed about this plan in process. Is this fraud? It certainly seems to be duplicity.

The neighbors on the other side of Rest Haven and many homeowners within 300 feet of this noxious plan are being marginalized as much as possible by Rest Haven and the city planners.

Also, dear readers, do you know that we already boast approximately 100 active cell towers in Eugene, not to mention antennas, powerful broadcasting towers and other

AT&T tower proposals in the works?

These towers are not harmless. EMR (electro-magnetic radiation) emissions promise us everything from sleepless nights to our own premature burial — perhaps even at Rest Haven! There are recent studies out of Yale University to confirm these dangers.

There is no planning by our city officials and there seems to be no limits set for dangerous cell tower sitings in Eugene. Communities used to agree, by law, that these dangerous and unsightly cell towers belonged on the periphery of our lives, away from homes, schools and places of human gathering. What has happened? And how can we recall this reckless abandon?

DISCONNECTED

The EW Outdoors issue May 22 is a perfect illustration of the environmental value/behavior disconnect within the Eugene community. Most of us have environmental values, but are then ironically mindless about the ways in which we find adventure. Is driving many miles to go on a walk in the woods a responsible choice considering the challenges we face with our already problematic carbon-emitting habits? I would love to see the Weekly showcase ways to get fresh air within bus/ bike/ walking accessibility.

This sense of entitlement to do what we want, when we want to is a cultural pattern that needs to change if we truly want to have an equitable footprint as global citizens. The UO Outdoor Program and the Obsidians outdoor club are two examples of groups that car/vanpool to destinations inaccessible by city bus.

DEFECTIVE STONEMWORK

Regarding the news story "Problems in Historic Stonework at Spencer Butte" May 8: There were 70 instances of defective work performed by the contractor as defined by the contract specifications. The article referred to "70 design flaws" instead.

The project cost taxpayers over $25,000. Critical structural elements that were specified such as below-grade stone foundation work, thickness of stone walls, proper "keying in" or masonry bonding of stones are non-existent or greatly lacking.

Face stones have already begun to fall out of the structure. Premature costly repairs are to be expected.

While he ignores addressing the bulk of the defective work, [contract manager Jesse] Cary-Hobbs says he let the contractor not meet some required specifications "because the contractor had encountered some difficulties with the stone." So let me get this correct: The city hired stonemasons who couldn't competently work the stone that the stonemasons themselves provided for the project as part of the contract.

A public works bid like this is supposed to give a level playing field to all contractors qualified to bid. We all bid

OPPOSITION IS BIGOTRY

There certainly has been no shortage of comments since the Whole Foods name was mentioned, anywhere from “It’s a local job killer and corporate weasel” to “good for downtown businesses” and “What’s the big deal? Don’t like it, don’t shop there.”

I feel the oddest comment I’ve read was in the May 1 EW where you have the Kiva, Sundance and Market of Choice as local and in the same sentence.

I wonder if when MoC opened stores in Ashland and Corvallis if the Ashland Food Co-op and First Alternative Co-op didn’t view the MoC entry into their city as a large out-of-towner harming their businesses and not a good fit for their cities’ character.

The Kiva is in the best place it’s ever been with the bus station and nearby student housing. Sundance customers wouldn’t be caught dead in Whole Foods. Though small, MoC is a corporation.

I feel the strong opposition to Whole Foods is simply bigotry and that the issues around the city lot and sale of alleys is best left to land use and permit criteria.

BLOOD IN THE WATER

The Department of Environmental Quality just released a pre-enforcement notice that it sent to Christopher Bartels doing business as Bartels Packing for discharging blood wastes to Fern Ridge Reservoir, wastes that are hazardous to health and pose a risk of “significant environmental harm.” Bartels, our local slaughterhouse, was fined over $15,000 for similar violations last June. In fact, they have been cited and fined several times for over the last 10 years. Between 1998 and 2008 alone there were nine complaints of non-compliance and fines, largely unpaid. Since then there have been more, including these most recent charges.

This is something to consider when choosing to eat animals, in particular locally raised animals, most of them ending their lives on the killing floor of Bartels. There are, of course, the humane considerations of the horrors animals endure during the process of slaughter, but if that isn’t incentive enough to give up eating animal flesh, then the continuing, blatant damage done to our watershed by Bartels, supported by irresponsible food choices, cannot be ignored by anyone with an environmental conscience.

CYCLING FOR VETS

I read with interest the “Let’s Roll: Enjoy the Great Outdoors with Eugene’s Many Community Bike Rides” story by Sarah Hagy May 22. I’d like to share with you information about our Cycling for Veterans (CV) group that wasn’t included in that article.

CV is a weekly after-work ride for veterans, especially disabled veterans, their friends and families held at 5:30 pm every Tuesday, May through September, starting at Maurie Jacobs Park off Fir Lane off River Road, here in Eugene. These rides are free. This is our third year.

CV is a program of the city of Eugene Adaptive Recreation designed to improve health and wellness and to promote camaraderie between veterans, their friends and family members over the age of 18. This is less than 12 mph ride, we leave no one behind and ride as a group so we can support one another. Also, veterans needing adaptive cycles are encouraged to call Patty Prather, city of Eugene Adaptive Recreation, at 682-5311.

This year CV is also hosting monthly training rides throughout the summer as a way to prepare for the VA MOVE Trophy at the Cycle Umpqua ride Sept. 6. The next training rides are the Willamette Valley Scenic Bikeway Veterans Ride June 28, The Row River Trail ride July 12, the Blackberry bRamble Aug. 3, the Eugene Celebration Parade Ride Aug. 23 and the VA MOVE Trophy competition at Cycle Umpqua Sept. 6.

These are also training rides for Team Oregon disabled veterans selected to participate in the National Veterans Summer Sports Clinic (NVSSC) held in September. Patty Prather, city of Eugene Adaptive Recreation, is also the coach for the Team Oregon attending the NVSSC.

Feel free to contact me at 337-3710.

WRETCHED HIGHWAYS

I am happy to see that there will finally be improvements made to the Beltline between Coburg Road and River Road!

From home to work I have to navigate Delta Highway, avoid vehicles coming onto Delta off Beltline then try to make my way onto the Beltline. I travel at 8:30 am and have many times barely made it onto the highway, narrowly missing logging trucks and other fast-moving vehicles. I am only on both wretched highways for 10 minutes but it is incredibly stressful.

I’m not educated in the logistics of highway safety, but I don’t believe the lights that were installed on the on-ramps help because traffic is congested and still moving too fast to merge at times. My greatest hope during this decision-making time and development is that the speed limit will be reduced at all times.

I ask drivers to slow down, be aware and allow traffic to get onto these highways safely! We’ve all been on those awful on-ramps and know how it feels to try to navigate without getting into an accident. And to those people who honk at me or tailgate when I slow down to allow a vehicle onto the highway: Back off!

Got Religious Freedom?

CONVOLUTED REASONING SPINS IN ANTI-GAY CIRCLES

In the U.S. your freedom of — and from — religion is protected. Everyone's is. Under federal law, you have the right to believe or disbelieve whatever you want, to practice (or not) any religion you choose, and to attend the church, synagogue, mosque, temple, coven, or faerie circle of your liking — if any. That's a lot of freedom.

But is it enough? A group of Oregon's anti-gay Christians, going by the catchy name "Friends of Religious Liberty" (an offshoot of the homo-hating Oregon Family Council) want more freedom than that. They want their very own special freedom — the freedom to discriminate.

At first they tried to put a "Protect Religious Freedom" measure on Oregon's November ballot arguing that "religious convictions" should be a valid reason to refuse services, facilities and goods related to same-sex weddings. But when the ballot initiative titles came out, the Freedom Protectors dropped their petition project tout suite. I guess they didn't like the wording Oregon's attorney general assigned to their bill, which was something along the lines of "Gives homophobes the right to be a-holes." Haha, JK.

In any case, come November, we will not be voting to legalize discrimination. Yay.

These so-called Friends of Religious Liberty are persistent, though. They've re-girded their loins and are now marching off to defend the religious freedom of one particular Gresham baker who refused to bake a cake for a couple of brides-to-be. They claim the baker, found to be in violation of Oregon's non-discrimination laws, was the one discriminated against.

The Friends of Religious Liberty support believers who believe their religion deems same-sex marriage too totally gross and icky to even bake a wedding cake. They believe they are the ones being discriminated against by non-discrimination laws. They need legal protection.

Of course they already have it. Not the freedom to violate nondiscrimination laws, but queer-averse Christians' freedom to believe and espouse whatever beliefs they want actually is protected. They're also protected from discrimination in housing, employment or public accommodations anywhere in this country, unlike, by the way, LGBTQ people, who have no such protection in 29 states. Here in Oregon we fought hard to finally include sexual orientation in our non-discrimination laws — and yes, religion is there, too. Always has been.

Still, they intend to sue Oregon for enforcing Oregon's nondiscrimination laws. Good luck with that.

They're fighting a losing battle. Oregon just joined the pantheon of marriage equality states and opened the doors of matrimony to all couples who care to enter. (Sorry, thrupples and other types of bonded love units not yet included.) This really makes the religious freedom fighters fighting mad, making such statements as, "The redefinition of marriage and state policies on sexual orientation have created a climate of intolerance and intimidation for citizens who believe that marriage is the union of a man and a woman and that sexual relations are properly reserved for marriage."

Say wha'? Right-wing Christians are the victims of intolerance and intimidation? Don't even try to wrap your mind around that. Their convoluted reasoning will have your head spinning so hard you'll be tempted to call an exorcist — which I believe would be your constitutionally protected religious freedom.

POLLUTION UPDATE

The Oregon Department of Environmental Quality sent International Paper a warning letter on May 16 following a line break at International Paper's Springfield facility, which resulted in discharge of treated process water into Irving Slough. According to DEQ's letter, the discharge violated Oregon environmental law, and this violation is classified as "serious." DEQ determined that the violation was beyond International Paper's reasonable control, and therefore chose not to assess a penalty. International Paper has indicated that it intends to develop a plan to reduce the probability of such incidents in the future. — Doug Quirke/ Oregon Clean Water Action Project

CORRECTIONS/CLARIFICATIONS

Due to incorrect information from sources, the disc golf story last week, "The Local Spin," incorrectly stated that the potential Stewart Pond course would be "gold" level occupying 12 acres on the west side of the site. The course will in fact be "blue" level occupying 30 acres on the site's southeast corner and will not be longer or harder than the Dexter course.

NEWS

KESEY SQUARE CLOSURE MAY UNFAIRLY AFFECT UNHOUSED

On May 27 the Eugene Police Department brought the City Council a proposal to close Kesey Square between 11 pm and 6 am, a move that some say is targeting the homeless population. Kesey Square, aka Broadway Plaza, is a city-deemed performance space that sits on the corner of Broadway and Willamette, home to the bronze statue of Ken Kesey. The City Council has not scheduled a vote.

Civil Liberties Defense Center attorney Lauren Regan says the proposal to close the public square is repugnant in the face of the human rights image touted by the city of Eugene.

"It's incredibly classist and discriminatory based on income and status, and I think we gave up those types of policies 100-plus years ago," Regan says.

Homeless rights advocate Alley Valkyrie says there is already a lack of public space for the unhoused downtown.

"What downtown Eugene needs are bathrooms, benches and more open spaces," Valkyrie says.

She says the ordinance changes will stir more resentment between businesses and the transient population. "The only reason they're there in the first place is because after park curfew there's nowhere else legal for them to be, and now we're going to kick them out of the last place that they're allowed to be," Valkyrie says. "Where are they supposed to go?"

Police Chief Pete Kerns says the businesses near the public plaza want it closed at night. He says food cart equipment is often broken and stolen.

"Anyone who walks across the plaza won't be — it doesn't affect them," Kerns says. "It's the people that want to park there and get in fights and drink and camp there overnight."

Tom Kamis, owner of The Davis on the corner of Broadway and Olive, estimates that a large fight happens once a week outside of his restaurant. "The fighting, I think, is going on a lot more in back alleys," Kamis says.

Valkyrie says she noticed more problems coming from the college-age crowd than the unhoused when she was living on 10th Avenue and Lincoln Street. She says she believes the police largely ignore their behavior because they spend money downtown.

"Public space is public," Valkyrie says. "We should not be excusing the behavior that comes from people who spend money and then scapegoating those who have no money."

Regan says enforcing this ordinance would cost taxpayers money and ensure that police will continue to get the largest chunk of the city's municipal budget.

'It's incredibly classist and discriminatory based on income and status, and I think we gave up those types of policies 100-plus years ago.'

— LAUREN REGAN, CIVIL LIBERTIES DEFENSE CENTER

"People will qualify for court-appointed lawyers based on the fact that they have no income and there are no other places for them to seek shelter in Eugene," Regan says.

Citations for being in Kesey Square between 11 pm and 6 am could amount in fines as high as $500 on the first offense and $1,000 and one year in jail for subsequent violations. Kerns says he expects the council to take action on the ordinance by the end of June.

The proposal also prohibits unlicensed dogs from the downtown activity zone, which covers the area between Sixth and 11th avenues and High and Lincoln streets.

"Neither proposal addresses the sources of homelessness or contributes to a solution," Eugene Human Rights Commission member Ken Neubeck says. "Carrying these proposals out will utilize staff time and financial resources that could be far better used by police in the prevention and pursuit of more serious crimes perpetrated on the housed and unhoused." — Missy Corr

"I believe history will record this resolution as a historic mistake. I am not going to go along with this kind of a program, in South Vietnam... that in my judgment is going to kill needlessly untold numbers of American boys, and for nothing."

— Senator Wayne Morse

50 years ago Oregon's Senator Morse was one of only two Congress members out of 516 to vote "no" on the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, authorizing the tragic escalation of the US war in Vietnam.

The catastrophic truth of Morse's words has challenged this country for half a century. More recently, "historic mistakes" in Iraq and Afghanistan have cost us and those countries dearly in lives, dollars and devastation.

But something remarkable happened as momentum built toward US military action in Syria last fall: the American people emphatically said, "NO!" We stopped another war, for now.

WE the undersigned believe: It's up to us to make the effort to get the facts, to raise the questions, to tell our representatives that we say "NO" to more costly wars, and "Yes" to diplomacy, to international resolution of conflict and to humanitarian assistance to victims of war.

MORE MURRELETS DISCOVERED IN ELLIOTT FOREST

Marbled murrelets have been observed in the East Hakki timber sale in the Elliott State Forest, according to the Coast Range Forest Watch, a group of citizen scientists that regularly surveys for the threatened sea birds that fly many miles in from the ocean to nest in the Elliott.

East Hakki is a 785-acre parcel that was auctioned from public ownership to private hands in April for $1,895,000. Oregon's Department of State Lands sold it to Seneca Jones Timber, a Eugene-based timber company whose owners told The Oregonian in April that the bid was "very much a personal decision" in response to environmental groups that had vowed to protest and sue to protect the land.

Two other parcels were sold off in April, Adams Ridge Tract 1 and Benson Ridge. The money from the sales goes toward Oregon's Common School Fund. "Clearcutting public old-growth forests to fund schools is as archaic as killing elephants for ivory," says Josh Laughlin of Cascadia Wildlands.

The discovery of the murrelets will decrease the land's worth, since logging activities are not allowed under the Endangered Species Act, Laughlin says. He says the East Hakki tract is valued at $5,590,000 without the presence of murrelets, but only $1,311,000 with them. Either way, he says, the state sold the land for just barely above the minimum bid, and far below the total appraisal.

Amanda St. Martin, one of the surveyors for Coast Range Forest Watch, was in the group of surveyors to spot the marbled murrelets in East Hakki.

"They were flying below canopy height, which means they need to use that area for their nest," St. Martin says. Murrelets fly about 40 miles inland to nest and lay only one egg in old-growth forests. Habitat loss has been a major factor in their threatened status in Oregon, says Laughlin, who describes the murrelet as an "incredible little seabird."

"The bottom line is the survey data demonstrates that the forested stand is occupied by the marbled murrelet, which means it's illegal to log it and we are continuing to explore all options to ensure the public forest remains vertical and that laws are upheld," Laughlin says.

Earlier this year Cascadia Wildlands and other environmental organizations successfully sued the Oregon Department of Forestry to halt the sale of 26 parcels in Elliott Forest.

Laughlin says, "We need leadership and political will to decouple cutting our heritage forest for school funding. And until that's done, there will continue to be intense public opposition to this

'We are continuing to explore all options to ensure the public forest remains vertical and that laws are upheld.'

—JOSH LAUGHLIN, CASCADIA WILDLANDS

antiquated policy."

The recent observations at East Hakki don't have implications just for the preservation of marbled murrelet habitat, but also for larger issues of public and private land use.

"It's not just the marbled murrelet habitat that's affected, it's every Oregon resident who can and does enjoy these places for any amount of recreation," St. Martin says. "Once these lands are sold to private interests, then nobody will be able to access them any more."

Adams Ridge Tract 1 and Benson Ridge are currently being surveyed for murrelets.

Adams Ridge Tracts 2 and 3 are set for sale in fall 2014. —Anna V. Smith

RENA DUNBAR

"My mom is white and my dad is black," says Rena Dunbar, who learned about racism first-hand, growing up along with her twin sister Leah in Fort Wayne, Ind., a segregated steel mill industrial town. "Seeing discrimination made us activists." The twins won scholarships to DePauw University in southern Indiana. They majored in English, started a chapter of Amnesty International and protested the first Gulf War. After graduation in 1994, Rena followed the Grateful Dead on tour as far as Autzen Stadium shows in June, and decided to stay on in Eugene. She completed a masters in teaching program at Pacific University and spent nine years teaching language arts to at-risk kids at South Eugene High School. "I wanted them to have an experience that challenges the mainstream culture," she says, "to hear and honor their own voices and stories." Dunbar left South to help start Peace Village at Network Charter School, taught there for two years, then returned to the 4J District at Spencer Butte Middle School in 2009. Sister Leah teaches at Churchill High School. For nine years, the twins held a monthly last Thursday youth poetry open mic, "Weapon of Choice: Voice!" at the Morning Glory Café. "What ended that was me going to middle school," says Rena. "Leah and I both teach a class called 'Courageous Conversations.' We examine how identity, culture and ethnicity shape our world view."

HAPPENING TEACHERS

BY PAUL NEEVEL

The Oregon Legislature last summer approved $3.75 million in seed funding for the South Willamette Valley Regional Accelerator and Innovation Network. RAIN's goal is economic development for our region, which is slowly making the transition from a dependence on natural resources to a knowledge-based economy. RAIN is intended to help researchers at UO and OSU spin off private companies, provide mentors and create workspaces for tech start-ups. Mayors Kitty Piercy of Eugene and Julie Manning of Corvallis will talk about what this program means at noon Friday, May 30, at City Club of Eugene. The lunch meeting will be at the Downtown Athletic Club, 999 Willamette St. $5 for non-members. Gov. John Kitzhaber was expected to be in Eugene this week (May 28) to sign a "declaration of cooperation" in support of RAIN at the Eugene Area Chamber of Commerce where RAIN has an office.

Lane County Farmers Market is looking ahead to expansion, possibly to a new permanent and year-round space on the old "butterfly lot" across the street. A joint city/county public hearing on the proposed land swap that would make this possible is planned for 6 pm Tuesday, June 3, at Harris Hall, 125 E. 8th Ave. The issues involved are complex, including financing, deed restrictions on the county-owned butterfly lot, traffic congestion, accessibility and collaboration with Saturday Market.

Bohemia Cafe and Apothecary is a new business started up by Serena Rebers, Felicia Colden and Andrea Garcia, at 383 W. 3rd Ave., next to Bounce gymnastics. The business serves organic coffee and espresso, hand-made artisan teas, elixirs, kombucha, herbal remedies and snacks, fruit smoothies and soon, paninis. Previously occupying the space was Sol Botanicals and before that Mama Rose's Naturals and Living Earth Herbs. Colden was the owner of Sol Botanicals. Open 10 am to 6 pm weekdays and Saturdays. Call Rebers at (949) 291-1326 or find the business on Facebook.

The Spencer Creek Growers' Market opens from 10 am to 2 pm Saturday, May 31, out Lorane Highway at the Spencer Creek Grange. Something new this year will be a section where locals can show and sell their Nigerian dwarf goat kids. This miniature breed is now permitted within Eugene city limits. See spencercreekgrange.org or call 341-1709.

The nonprofit Mid Lane Cares is planning its annual fundraising event, "Benefits by the Glass," from 1 to 4 pm Sunday, June 1, at Domaine Meriwether Wines, located off Highway 126 in Veneta. The event, now in its fifth year, will feature live and silent auctions, local wines, dinner, entertainment and more. Proceeds will support the numerous activities and programs housed in the new Fern Ridge Service Center. Visit midlanecares.org or call 935-4555.

Eugene Local Foods co-manager Leisha Wood will speak about her online farmers market service at noon Wednesday, June 4, at the Hilton downtown. Lunch is optional. The organization is "committed to creating a sustainable, local food system through offering locally sourced foods from small farmers while serving consumers with an easy, fun and convenient shopping model," says Wood, who currently works for Willamette Farm and Food Coalition as the Buy Local Campaign coordinator.

Dexter Lake Farmers Market starts up its new season from noon to 3 pm Sunday, June 1, at Dexter Lake State Park, 39011 Hwy. 58. The Fiddlin' Big Sue Band will play and other musicians are wanted for more Sunday gigs. Call 937-3007. For selling produce or consignment crafts information call 937-3034. See also dexterlakefarmersmarket.org.

NumberShire is a new math video game developed in Eugene to help first grade students improve their math skills. The game has gained recognition by the U.S. Department of Education and shows early success in the educational technology sector. "We want to help as many students improve their math skills as possible," says Marshall Gause, president of Thought Cycle, the company that developed the game in a joint venture with the UO Center on Teaching and Learning. "For every copy parents purchase, we will donate one to the school of your choice." Camas Ridge Community Elementary in Eugene and La Pine Elementary School in La Pine have already received free copies. See numbershire.com or call 870-1390.

• Emerge Oregon has been recruiting and training women to run for public office for five years now. The May Primary had 14 EmERGE alumnae running for positions around the state, including Dawn Lesley's challenge to unseat Jay Bozievich in the West Lane commission race, a race so close it's still undecided. Sheri Moore, who ran against Sid Leiken in the Springfield commission race, is another grad, along with Rep. Val Hoyle. "Running for elected office takes courage," reads a statement from the EmERGE Oregon Board of Directors last week following the election. "We are so proud of all our EmERGE sisters who took that leap of faith and put their names forward to help make Oregon a better place for all of us and our families." See emergeor.org to support the organization and its alumnae.

• "College is the time when everyone experiences those things such as sex and fun and pleasure," mass murderer Elliot Rodgers said in a YouTube video before he killed six people and injured seven more in Santa Barbara, Calif., this past weekend. He continues, "but in those years I've had to rot in loneliness, it's not fair ... I don't know why you girls aren't attracted to me but I will punish you all for it." In the wake of the killings, people will search for answers — mental illness or disgraceful gun laws that allowed Rodgers to buy three weapons. We are reminded of something as we read Rodgers' manifesto in the light of the recent UO rape allegations: Misogynist killings and rape aren't just the work of a single sick person; they are the work of a society and ideology that sees women as property or prizes to claim. Rape culture doesn't just target women; it targets trans people and men as well. We need to not only fix our legal and health care and gun control systems, we need to fix the ideologies that allow mass killings to happen again and again.

• The Eugene Area Chamber of Commerce leadership claims mandated sick leave for employees in Eugene is bad for business and threatens our "fragile" economic recovery, but the Chamber doesn't calculate the financial gains from building a more stable and humane workforce. Staff turnover is expensive. Forcing sick workers and those with sick dependents to take unpaid leave or be fired sends a message to workers that they are not valued. And any policies that lead to low morale, low productivity and a workplace rife with contagion are counterproductive when it comes to retaining solid, productive employees.

• Profound sadness and anger. That's what we felt after watching Larry Kramer's The Normal Heart on HBO on Sunday, May 25. The tragedy of our country's unwillingness to acknowledge the AIDS epidemic and to do something about it was brilliantly portrayed in the film adapted from the 1985 screen play by Larry Kramer. We also learned that activism only works if it is fierce and truly active. The importance of recent rulings on same-sex marriage rang clear near the end of the film, both because of legal safeguards for same-sex couples and for the affirmation by the society of their place in this country. Somehow, see The Normal Heart if you possibly can. The film continues to be shown on HBO. Watch the trailer at wkly.ws/1ri.

• Is OSU more green than UO? The annual analysis of U.S. colleges by Princeton Review ranked OSU high for environment, but not UO. OSU spends 36 percent of its food budget on local/organic food; UO spends 7 percent. OSU requires 32 percent of its students to take a course related to sustainability, UO only 5 percent. The list goes on. But Princeton doesn't quantify the value of environmental and sustainability programs at either university. What value do we put on the UO's Public Interest Environmental Law Conference, the Sustainable Cities Initiative or the Oregon Leadership in Sustainability grad program? How about OSU's 10 acres of solar facilities or its pledge to build within its existing boundary to keep the campus compact? (UO is also trying not to sprawl but owns a lot of undeveloped real estate within its boundary.)

Individual profs can also have a big impact. Environmental science professor Jane Lubchenco, for example, has inspired a generation of young scientists at OSU and has gone on to distinguish herself (and OSU) nationally as chief of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and even at a Vatican conference on climate change this month.

WTF?

LINZEY RETURNS AMID GMO FIGHT

The current fight against GMOs (genetically modified organisms) in Lane County is one small battle in a larger war, according to Thomas Linzey, the executive director of the legal nonprofit group the Community Environmental Legal Defense Fund.

Jackson County in southeast Oregon banned GMOs in last week's election, despite $1 million in outside money to defeat the bill and another anti-GMO measure passed in Josephine County as well. However the Josephine ban is in limbo because during a special legislative session dealing with the public retirement system last year Gov. John Kitzhaber signed a bill into law that limits the ability of local governments and to ban specific farming practices, such as planting GMOs. Jackson County's ban was exempt because the measure had already qualified for the ballot.

Here in the Willamette Valley, residents in Benton County are already circulating signatures to get a measure on the ballot. The fight to get a GMO ban on the ballot in Lane County is still being held in limbo due to legalities on ballot language. Linzey says he is confident that Support Local Food Rights will be able to get the fight against GMOs to the ballot for either this year or the next election.

Benton and Lane counties are among the 160 municipalities that CELDF has aided with free legal advice. CELDF has been helping put forward "new systems of laws to prevent GMOs and unsustainable food practices." However, the overarching goal for Linzey and others at CELDF is much larger.

"It's a bigger fight than that," Linzey says. "And that fight is whose rights are going to trump whose. It's all been us on the defense and not on the offense, and that's where we lose."

Linzey will talk about the many ways that "the last 40 years of environmental activism has been crap," including how the counties have been rendered incapable of governing themselves. The chance to reclaim that governance, says Linzey, starts with asserting the right to say no to GMOs at the county level.

Linzey will be speaking on "We the People Rising Up: Rejecting Corporate Control One Community at a Time" at 7:30 pm June 4 at The Shedd. Free, but $10 suggested donation. For more information, email info@orcommunityrights.org. — Kevin Sullivan

GLOBAL WARMING PROFITEERING

Oregon is "the hub, for whatever reason, of the for-profit fire industry," writes journalist and South Eugene High School grad McKenzie Funk in his book Windfall: The Booming Business of Global Warming (Penguin Press, 2014, $27.95). Funk writes not simply of how we are preparing for a warmer planet, but rather he focuses on those who see the melt, drought and deluge of climate change as a market opportunity. Funk will speak at 6 pm Thursday, June 5, at the Eugene Public Library, free.

According to the most recent National Climate Assessment that came out earlier in May, Pacific Northwest forests are already feeling the effects of the 1.3-degree temperature increase from 1895 to 2011 that has hit this area.

The report says that global sea levels have risen about 8 inches since 1880 and are projected to rise 1-4 feet by 2100.

Funk writes of how climate change alters the geopolitical map: "melting glaciers around the Matterhorn had shifted a border in place since 1861 — it followed a ridge of snow that was no longer there — causing Italy and Switzerland to sit down and start negotiating a new one." In Kashmir, he writes, experts worry "the accelerating melt of the Siachen Glacier would further provoke the India-Pakistan fight."

What sounds like a disaster to planners, farmers, millions of predicted climate refugees and all of us who will be affected by drought, heat and flooding sounds like a gold mine to some major companies, according to Funk. Rather than tell the twice-told tale of how climate change is a disaster overtaking our planet, Funk, son of David Funk of marketing agency bell + funk, tells of the big business of climate change and of those who profit and grow from someone else's crisis — from Oregon's burgeoning industry of private firefighters for hire to Israeli snowmakers and Dutch sellers of seawall technology.

Writers and journalists struggle over how to call attention to the dangers the Earth faces from global warming and demonstrate that we need to change our ways. Windfall does just that while simultaneously showing that climate change and how we deal with it — or don't — is deeply intertwined with who controls the wealth of the planet. — Camilla Mortensen

NEVER A KINDNESS TOO SMALL

Keegan Keppner brings food and attention to Eugene homeless

Keegan Keppner sits in a green plastic lawn chair with “Whoville” scrawled on it in Sharpie, the O written as a peace sign and surrounded by hearts and asterisks as if it was decorated by an adoring fan. Keegan’s knees are jammed up in his black sweatshirt and he shifts around to evade the chilliness of the spring evening. Cars roar past the temporary encampment on 8th and Mill.

Aside from his fidgeting, very little about his attitude or comments reveals Keegan as the 10-year-old child that he is. Keegan, who has terminal brain cancer, took up the issue of homelessness in Eugene in December, and since then has been supporting the unhoused through supplies and advocacy.

The “Whos” around him talk about where they’ll set up camp next. A cluster of tents and chairs is all that is left of the homeless community named Whoville that lasted for months near the University of Oregon campus. Whoville was closed by the city in April, and the Whos have been searching for a new permanent location, since the city did not offer a place for the Whos to relocate to.

Some in the camp get aggravated at the discussion and leave; others stay and vent their opinion. And when Keegan pipes up, they listen.

“If it wasn’t a school night, I’d stay out here tonight,” Keegan declares to the group. They nod and murmur knowingly. The number of times that Keegan has stood by them, individually and as a group, has made him true to his word in their book. But, as Keegan’s father Steve Magray points out, for Keegan there is homework to be done.

“The thing about that is when you guys get home, the homework will still be there,” one of the Whos says. “We may not be!” They all give a tense laugh. It was at the original Whoville encampment on Franklin that Keegan first brought the Whos food (chili, one of his personal favorites) because, while watching TV at his home in Junction City, he saw a homeless man in a wheelchair in Whoville crying. After seeing the encampment for himself and asking his parents why they were there, he decided he wanted to help. His father was, at one point in his life, homeless.

Since then he’s not only helped, he’s taken up the cause. Keegan started an online fundraiser and brought the Whos chili, sandwiches, pizza and snacks to keep them going. During one trip to the camp, he handed out care packages with first-aid kits and “Click, click... BOOM! You’re infected by Keegan’s kindness” handwritten on each bag.

In an attempt to publicize the issue and help people understand the Whos’ day-to-day struggles, he’s talked with Congressman Peter DeFazio about the homelessness issue and walked from Whoville to Salem with his dad and others to talk to Gov. John Kitzhaber. Although Keegan wasn’t able to walk the entirety of the 66-mile journey, he walked the first 15 and the last 10 into the capital. His many exploits are documented on his “Keegan’s Kindness” Facebook page.

More recently, Keegan challenged Eugene City Manager John Ruiz to spend a night on the streets with him to see what it feels like. Ruiz did not take up the challenge, but Keegan kept his word and spent the weekend on the streets with his dad and the Whos.

These events have garnered local and national news attention from Oregon to New York, not only because Keegan is young, but also because of his terminal cancer. Kim Magray, Keegan’s mother, describes Keegan’s condition as “the worst but the best,” because, while it is terminal, it is an extremely slow-growing tumor, but also more difficult to treat than the other, faster-growing type of tumor.

Keegan was first diagnosed when he was 22 months old, and went through chemotherapy up until he was 6. Kim Magray would explain the tiresome MRIs by telling him he had an “owie” in his brain that they needed to look at. “It’s shaped like a high-five!” Keegan says.

Keegan hasn’t needed any treatments for four years and has regained much of his sense of taste lost during chemotherapy. For years Keegan would only eat hot dogs and chicken nuggets because it was all he could taste. He happily reports that he now loves chili and pizza, his food of choice for the Whos.

Although the news coverage of Keegan’s activism has put a large emphasis on his cancer, his illness isn’t what drives his work with the Whos, nor is it a major everyday issue. “He knows he has cancer, and he’s open to talk to people about it,” Kim Magray says. “But he acts like a normal kid and wants to be treated like a normal kid.”

Like other fourth graders at Laurel Elementary, Keegan plays video games, has his troupe of friends over for pizza nights and wants to travel when he’s older (specifically to New York City, because it’s huge, and Mexico, because he’s half Mexican). He’s been trying to recruit some friends on the sly to come help with the Whos, with their parents’ permission. Eventually, he says, they may try to do a small food drive to help the Whos.

In general, it’s Keegan who fuels the actions, and his parents who give him the go-ahead and support. “Sometimes it’s me and sometimes it’s me and dad. I speak of little ideas and then dad thinks about it for a little bit and says a yes or a no to it,” Keegan explains.

Steve Magray says they’ve gotten some backlash from people online via comment sections and Facebook, saying the family is a PR media scam or that they shouldn’t let Keegan spend so much time on the issue, such as when he took time off of school with his teacher’s blessing for the walk to Salem.

“It’s hard for a parent to tell a kid no with such high ambitions,” Steve Magray says. “He’s got to learn to have a voice. He has compassion for the world around him. What kind of father would I be to not support him in this?”

For the time being, Keegan isn’t sure what he’ll do next, though he says if he had the money he’d get all the Whos apartments, just so they could have some respite from exposure to the weather. In the meantime, he hopes to keep bringing attention to the issue. “[People] mostly aren’t going out and seeing what it’s like. They make their opinions and they don’t even go and see what it’s like,” Keegan says. “There’s still a lot to do.”

Whoville is still searching for a home. On Saturday, June 7, from 11 am to 6 pm a Music in the Meadow event will take place at 22nd and Madison to raise money for Nightingale Health Sanctuary featuring John Shipe, The Sugar Beets, Halie and the Moon and the students and friends of Scotty Perey. Let's face it — we had a rough winter. OK, so maybe we didn't weather the so-called "polar vortex," but with two snowstorms, an ice storm of epic proportions and temperatures plummeting to below 7 degrees in December, there were plenty of "what the hell?!" moments.

Now, clear your mind of all that, breathe in the warm breeze and exult in the beautiful thing that is an Oregon summer. And what a summer it is: sand castle building and rock climbing, concerts and county fairs, baseball games and a plethora of races and marathons sure to satisfy the most avid of track lovers. Fire up the barbecue because summer is here!

DOWN BY THE SEASHORE

Try a sand castle contest for that sand-between-your-toes vacation feeling

After an Alaskan earthquake sent a tidal wave crashing down on the Oregon coast in 1964, Cannon Beach residents decided they needed a fun event to raise spirits and bring people back to the beach. Thus, the Cannon Beach Sand Castle Contest began, and 50 years later it has grown into a weekend-long, award-winning event that draws thousands out to enjoy the sun, the sea and — of course — the sand.

"It started out with very small roots, very casual, and it has evolved and grown over the years so that now here we find ourselves celebrating the 50th," says Debbie Nelson, the chair of the Cannon Beach Chamber of Commerce. The annual contest just won the Oregon Heritage Tradition Award for an event of 50 years that represents the spirit of Oregon.

The fun starts 5 pm Friday, June 20, with a spaghetti, salad and chowder feed at the Chamber, 207 N. Spruce St. After dinner comes the show, with a parade to celebrate the 50th anniversary. "As a hometown girl here, I am just really happy to carry on the tradition," Nelson says, remembering the parade when she was young. The main sand castle float can be seen in advance at this year in Portland's Starlight Parade May 31.

The next morning at 11 am Saturday, June 21, contestants will swarm the beach, often dressed in the event's T-shirt or with a group theme, such as pirate costumes or funny hats, to start their sand creations. Masters, large groups, small groups, adults, teens and children compete with the sole instructions to have fun playing in the sand and making art with natural beach materials. "Just have fun and be creative, because that is the whole idea around it," Nelson says. This year's winners will receive a special 50th anniversary medallion and $1,200 to first, $800 to second and $400 to third place.

As the sun sets, people linger on the beach to enjoy music by local musicians and the warmth of a bonfire. On Sunday morning, June 22, the weekend will end with a 9 am fun run on the beach. You can register for $20 by calling 503-463-2623 or online at cannonbeach.org (registration fee covers T-shirt and event expenses).

Meanwhile in Lincoln City, mermaids, sand castles, dogs, chowder heads, pirate ships, tikis and plumbing fixtures decorate the town for the Siletz Bay Sand Castle Contest in the historic Taft District. About 100 entries will compete as groups, pairs, individuals and kids under 12 in one of the 10 categories starting at 1 pm Saturday, Aug. 9, and ending at 6 pm with the winners announced by the 20-odd judges on the dock. First-place winners leave with a $100 prize thanks to the Bay Area Merchants Association, while the top three children's masterpieces win a beach bucket surprise.

"Our reputation is that we are a family-friendly fun event. I think that benefits our community because people recognize and remember us for that, a simple community that is just family-oriented and has fun things for everyone to do," says event coordinator Mary Ann McGill.

To the thousand or so spectators that flock to the beach each year, McGill says have fun walking around, witnessing the fun and excitement, as well as enjoying the music and quirky entertainment, like tossing salt water taffy off the dock. The talent and creativity varies, from clever dog sculptures and a pair of dolphins riding a wave, to a toilet.

Stay after to take advantage of the abundant driftwood for fort building or roasting hot dogs and s'mores over a bonfire. Register the day of the event on the beach with a can of food per person for the Lincoln City Food Bank. For further questions call Mary Ann McGill: (541) 921-1828. — Sarah Hagy

FLOATING THE PARTY

Tubing and drinking while keeping a lid on safety

A muted chorus of flip-flops drags across pavement on a sweltering spring day, as scantily clad coeds make a pilgrimage toward the river, inner tubes draped like bandoleers. Gotta keep those hands free for important things, like beer.

Yes, you can drink on any river in Oregon, but as to whether you should ... well, as in many things, moderation is key.

Legally, first you must mind the composition of your "tube." Any multi-chambered craft — as in it has a bottom, or is two or more tubes tied together — is subject to boating regulations. That means no drinking, as well as the required carrying of a personal flotation device (PFD) and whistle. In all honesty, wearing a PFD is not a bad idea when tubing in general.

Fire department personnel monitor put-ins to assure people have the right equipment. Take that as an act of grace, not an intrusion. It beats a citation from a sheriff's deputy when you land.

While afloat, you're likely to be left to your own devices. Few tubers actually commit to getting hammered on the river; most say it's too damn hot to be getting plumb inebriated and the dangers diminish when you're not trying to prove something.

Amanda Craig, a 20-something Eugenean, has tubed the Willamette River a dozen times with friends. "Every time I've gone, we were drinking," she says, "but I've never seen anyone have an accident because of it."

Craig says people stick to a couple-few beers because there are dodgy moments, like shallow spots full of sharp rocks or the boat lane/bypass at Interstate-5, where debris can cause invisible hazards. "Going through that route, you can't be wasted and make it," she says.

TYPICAL ROUTES:

Willamette: Island Park in Springfield to around Ferry St. Bridge in Eugene
McKenzie: Hayden Bridge in Springfield to Harvest Landing in Springfield

AREA WATER READINGS:

Temperature (US Geological Survey) goo.gl/OzngqK
Depth (National Weather Service) goo.gl/UzccJX

The Willamette, in general, is tame compared to the McKenzie River. "We were on a faster part of the McKenzie," says UO senior Will Kanellos, "and we got caught on a submerged tree." Kanellos had to stand up on the tree, water rushing past, and untangle several tubes that were tied together. "My girlfriend fell out," he recalls. "It was scary, but we got through it with just a few scratches." Kanellos only had a couple beers, and he says if he'd had a few more, things might have gone awry.

Joe Zaludek, Deputy Chief of Special Operations for the Eugene-Springfield Fire Department, supervises the Water Rescue Team. Zaludek says half of river rescues involve alcohol. Near Island Park in Springfield, he says, "I pulled a guy out who fell from his tube. He popped off and sunk like a stone. He was impaired and couldn't swim. His friends saw him go down, but it was too late."

Zaludek cites high water level at a rapids and lack of a PFD as critical factors in this fatal accident. Temperature, he says, is also dangerous. On May 1, when air temperatures reached 86 degrees, the water was only 48 degrees — cold enough to cause hypothermia, which is easily compounded by intoxication.

There is still a consensus, however, among those who enjoy the float: If you use your head and look out for each other, warnings need not deprive you of pleasure. "I think it's something that everyone who lives in Eugene should try at least once," Craig says. "It's definitely worth it." — Adrian Black

PLACES AND SPACES

Showing out-of-towners unique Eugene

Eugene Weekly asked geographer Al Urquhart to let us in on some of his favorite spaces and places in Eugene.

What would he show summer visitors from larger Western cities — Portland, Seattle? We don't want sites simply of local interest. With these places and spaces Urquhart said he is trying to show the unique character of Eugene and Springfield. Urquhart taught cultural geography at the UO for about 30 years and has been keenly interested in the unfolding of this area. Let us know what you would add or subtract from this list.

BUILDINGS

First Christian Church, Wayne Morse Federal Courthouse, old Unitarian Church, Eugene Public Library, Shelton McMurphey Johnson House and these special places on the UO campus: Deady Hall, Gerlinger Hall, Jaqua Center and the Museum of Natural and Cultural History.

ROOMS

Around town: the lobby of the Hult Center and inside McMenamins North Bank Restaurant. On the UO campus: the throne room and interior courtyard of the Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art; special collections room of the Knight Library; hallway and study area of the Knight School of Law; Gerlinger Lounge; atriums of the science complex and the College of Business.

LANDSCAPES AND VIEWS

Riverfront bike and walking paths; EWEB plaza; DeFazio bridge; Delta Ponds north of Valley River Center; views from bridges; Skinner Butte Park, including views from summit; Spencer Butte and Ridgeline trails; Hendricks Park rhododendron garden. Intersection of 5th and Willamette (one block in each direction) and UO campus as a whole; ensembles on UO campus — Knight Library quadrangle, School of Education courtyard, School of Music interior courtyard; Pioneer Cemetery; Hayward Field and adjacent sports fields, football buildings and courtyard and Autzen Stadium.

OTHER VIEWS

West Eugene Wetlands; Amazon Park's view south over soccer fields near Roosevelt Junior High; College Hill Reservoir.

HISTORICAL STREETS

5th Avenue from High to Oak; Broadway from Lincoln to High; Jefferson from 8th to 13th; Washington from 13th to 18th; Lincoln from 18th to 27th; University and Potter from 19th to 24th; Fairmont Boulevard.

Don't forget the Main Street of Springfield and also River Road.

A CULTURAL CELEBRATION OF THE SEVEN CELTIC NATIONS

With more than 100,000 annual guests at the 74-acre Seattle Center, 2014 headliners include hip-hop legends like The Wu-Tang Clan, J. FOOD FAR AND WIDE

Summer festivals celebrate grub and drinks of all kinds

From farm to sea to garden, Oregon is an invigorating place to live if you love good, fresh food and drink. Every summer, foodies gather around the state to celebrate the bounty of our cuisine at food festivals. Here are six events worth planning mini road trips around in the summer of 2014:

Oregon brews are that much more delicious when consumed in a beautiful setting. This year, the Grande Ronde Valley is home to the inaugural Eastern Oregon Beer Festival, which will be held June 21 at the Union County Fairgrounds in La Grande. At press time, 16 breweries including Eugene's Oakshire were confirmed participants. Admission is free, but a $20 pass for a mug and eight tasting tokens is needed to really participate. Learn more about the festival, as well as sober transportation, at eobeerfest.org.

Portland's food cart scene is famous, and June 21 you can sample some of the best the microeateries have to offer at the Portland Summer Food Cart Festival, home of the third annual East County Food Cart Competition. The gathering, held at Mt. Hood Community College in Gresham, features carts like A Cajun Life, The Cheese Plate and Retrolicious. It's all a benefit for nonprofit ALSO (Adult Learning Systems of Oregon), which promotes the full inclusion of people with developmental and intellectual disabilities in their communities. Admission is $10 before May 31, $15 after. Find out more at wky.ws/1r2.

Maybe the Northwest beer and wine scene just isn't for you, but saké sounds delicious. Check out the fourth annual Saké Fest PDX June 26 at the Sentinel Hotel in Portland. The event includes food and sake sampling stations plus a mini education on pairing saké with foods from cheese to chocolate to pizza. Admission plus samples is $50. Go to sakefestpdx.com for more info.

It's the festival that makes you say, "What?" Shady Cove's 14th annual SPAM Festival is back June 28. This free celebration of the canned, pre-cooked meat gives festivalgoers the chance to try SPAM kabobs and SPAM burgers, all while benefiting local nonprofits like the Shady Cove School's National Honor Society. Details are at shadycovespamfestival.com.

Garlic lovers, unite: The North Plains Elephant Garlic Festival is back for a 17th year Aug. 8-10. The free festival has a small-town feel and good humor — its slogan is "fun stinks!" — and draws thousands each year with music, food and a parade complete with the Garlic Queen. See funstinks.com.

Feast Portland is a young festival that's growing fast. Last year more than 10,000 people attended, and in its third year organizers will hold dozens more big events, classes, speakers and tasting panels throughout downtown Portland Sept. 18-21. Net proceeds benefit Partners for a Hunger Free Oregon and Share Our Strength. Find the full 2014 rundown at feastportland.com. — Shannon Finnell

Sniffing out what you shouldn't miss in the arts this week

There are certain artists whose work is like a fingerprint, a signature; their art — in style, technique and content — is unmistakably theirs. Locally, we are lucky to have lots of these artists: Shanna Trumbly, Amy Crehore, Jud Turner, John Jay Cruson, Analee Fuentes and too many others to list here. On May's Last Friday ArtWalk in the Whit, see the work of another distinctive artist, Bend's Megan McGuinness, at Sam Bond's. The quirky, gestural anthropomorphic acrylic, oil and pen pieces in her show "Photosyngenics" are sure to bounce right off the old barn's walls. Equally masterful are the pastel paintings of Sarah Peroutka on view at Willard C. Dixon architecture firm, 300 Blair Blvd. Hop south to 543 Blair for Countdown Studios' "Women in Hip Hop," featuring Ashland's Sassy D, Eugene's Valentina (vrgnz), Lisa Vasquez and more. Ye Olde Whiteaker Firehouse is hosting its own evening of LFAW festivities, "UNREFINED," with performances by dancers Jana Meszaros and the No Shows and readings by EW's own arts writers Rick Levin and Andy Valentine.

Legalize marijuana: The UO School of Law library is now hosting Reefer Madness: The Legal History of the Loco Weed through December. The exhibit explores America's legal chronicle of the weed dating back to 1619, "when the first cannabis-related law was enacted by the Virginia Assembly requiring all farmers to grow the plant."

Bounce Gymnastics is hosting Alice in Wonderland, a year-end recital for its advanced aerial and tumbling students, 2 pm Saturday, May 31, at the McDonald Theatre. In the mad, mad world of Alice, nothing seems more suiting or magical than the flowing silks of the aerial circus arts.

Grantland: The Oregon Arts Commission and the Ford Foundation have awarded 18 Career Opportunity Grants to Oregon artists, including one to Eugene visual artist Mike Stephen. Stephen received $1,500 for the one-month Foundation OBRAS single-artist residency program in Renkum, Holland.

LIFE AND DEATH BY PABST

Whiteaker stalwart Lefty Kelleher takes home top prize for Eugene PBR art contest

“I’m a former biker, former drummer, got my arm ripped off by a drunk driver. I thought I’d do something different. Last year I went to the art contest and I said, ‘I can do better than that.’”

By some fateful collision of time, situation and personality, certain individuals come to represent the places where they live, in such a way that the association becomes nearly mythological: Lou Reed symbolizes the junky glam of the East Village, Harvey Milk is forever Mayor of the Castro District, Saul Bellow haunts Chicago’s Humboldt Park.

And then there’s Lefty Kelleher, reigning pope of Eugene’s Whiteaker neighborhood. With his broad pirate bandana, endearing fuck-you attitude and mean left hook (literally), Kelleher perfectly embodies the spirit of the Whit — a spirit that is at once inclusive and free, that cheers “let’s do it!” in the same breath it hollers “don’t tread on me, mofo!”

Earlier this month, Kelleher won the second annual Eugene Pabst Blue Ribbon art contest with his “Death by Pabst” sculpture, further cementing his local legend and ensuring him a year’s supply of PBR (52 cases), which he jokes should last him about three months.

Incredibly, the skull, which is plastered with PBR labels and has an actual PBR tap mounted on top, was Kelleher’s first-ever attempt at making art. “I just decided to do something different,” he says. “I’m a former biker, former drummer, got my arm ripped off by a drunk driver. I thought I’d do something different. Last year I went to the art contest and I said, ‘I can do better than that.’”

Keller was born in Brooklyn and moved to the Whit nearly two decades back after a stint in Flagstaff, Ariz. “I’ve been in Whiteaker for 18 years,” he says. “I landed in this town and I never left. I love it.”

He recently retired from a gig in property maintenance, though he still receives chunks of settlement money from the accident that years ago cost him his left arm. In fact, he says, he and some friends recently blew his most recent allotment in a bit of a spree. “Killed ten grand in Vegas,” Kelleher laughs. “Smashed out a TV. They put me in another room, because there’s prime rib on the ceiling. They’re like, ‘How’d you get that window open?’”

Kelleher says he’s pleased with the results of his first stab at art, which took him about a week to complete. “I gotta admit, man, I talked to the owners of Sam Bond’s and they donated like 30 bottles to me. I soaked off the labels, trimmed them,” he says, explaining that he then pasted the labels onto a ceramic skull. “It’s not real, but it looks like it could have been.” The owners of the recently closed Diablo’s Downtown Lounge, Kelleher adds, donated the beer tap that protrudes from the top of the skull.

“Death by Pabst” will now go up against art by a contest winner from the Portland region, and if Kelleher wins, he’s got himself a lifetime supply of PBR, or 52 cases a year until he dies. “I know!” he says. “They’re trying to kill me, man!”

Kelleher says the organizers of the competition contacted him about his art after he took the blue ribbon. “They asked me after I won, ‘You want to donate this to us?’ I said, no, this is going on eBay, bitch. I’ve been offered $400 so far.”

The contest was held May 18 at the Horsehead Bar downtown, where Kelleher’s installation was up against seven other pieces. “This is crazy,” he says of winning the whole shebang, “because this is the town of artists and I just won $12,000 worth of beer. Plus, if I save the cans, I made another $72.”

Kelleher said he doesn’t have any big plans on pursuing art as a career; for now, he’s just happy being Lefty. “I’m 52, I’m an old fuck,” he jokes. “I figure after dating all these strippers, it’s going to cost me an arm and a leg, and I’ve already lost an arm. I gotta stop.”

Not that he isn’t pleased as punch to have a good, long supply of free PBR, even if it’s brought a ton of friends out of the woodwork. “This is like the lottery,” Kelleher laughs. “It’s a burden. I have a lot of friends, but I didn’t know they knew where I lived. These guys are all my family around here.” ■

A BRIGHT FUTURE

Days of Future Past is the best X-Men film since 2003's X2

Days of Future Past opens in a dark future, a world devastated by war. A ragtag band of mutants, led by Professor X (Patrick Stewart) and Magneto (Ian McKellan), puts up a decent fight against the Sentinels, but they have zero hope of victory against the shape-shifting, mutant-hunting robots. In a last-ditch effort, Kitty Pryde (Ellen Page) sends the consciousness of Wolverine (Hugh Jackman) back into his '70s self. The last chance to change the deadly future hinges on Wolverine convincing a bitter young Charles Xavier (James McAvoy) and human-loathing Magneto (Michael Fassbender), who are not really over the divisive events of First Class, to come together and save the future.

Bear with the plot's introductory info-dumps and you'll find the best X-Men movie since X2 (also directed by Bryan Singer) — one that spares us needless origin stories and understands that the beauty of having two Charles and two Erics is showing us how each shapes the person the other will become. Days is a bit of a boys' club — while much rests on the choices made by Mystique (Jennifer Lawrence), the movie sidelines anyone else who isn't a white male — but it's also a return to form after the execrable The Last Stand and the middling First Class. Lawrence gives militant mutant Mystique a new layer of righteous anger; Jackman, playing messenger boy, is all quirked brow and tired fury; it turns out that strung-out and self-centered is a good look for McAvoy's young Charles.

The key new face is Peter Maximoff (Evan Peters), who steals the movie's central set piece — a stylish, funny and symbolic sequence: While the heroes from previous movies all but stand still, Peter, who will grow up to be known as Quicksilver, resets the whole room, taking out threats in the span of a breath and reveling in the fun of it. The torch is being passed; the next generation is ready for it.

But let's not write off the old gang just yet. Days of Future Past builds to an almost preposterously dramatic finale, but its central theme is rather more human-sized: the hope that people can change. It's fitting that the climax affects more than just the future of the X-Men; it results in some positively delightful changes to the past as well. A brief after-credits sequence teases X-Men: Apocalypse, scheduled for 2016. It's going to be a long wait. ■

FINDING VIVIAN MAIER

This 83-minute documentary will change how you see the world, literally and figuratively. After purchasing a trove of more than 100,000 black-and-white street photographs and negatives at a Chicago auction, director and historian John Maloof plays detective, following a trail of clues — handwritten letters, receipts and, of course, photos — to unveil the identity of the bold and masterful recluse behind the camera: the late Vivian Maier. Through interviews with neighbors, the families she nannied (including Phil Donahue's), long-lost relatives, celebrity photographers and archivists, a portrait of an artist at once loving and dark emerges. Finding Vivian Maier is one hell of a mystery that will make you question whether geniuses pass through our lives everyday unnoticed. (Bijou Metro)

THE LUNCHBOX

The Lunchbox tells the story of a widowed government clerk and a young wife whose husband barely notices her. Of course, the exquisite lunches she prepares for her husband, each delivered by Mumbai's dabbawalas, are brought to the clerk by accident, and the rest — unless you've never seen a romantic comedy — is predictable, though pleasant enough. (Bijou Metro)

ONLY LOVERS LEFT ALIVE

Languid, elegiac, mournful and unexpectedly funny, Jim Jarmusch's Only Lovers Left Alive introduces us to the ancient Adam (Tom Hiddleston) and Eve (Tilda Swinton), a pair of vampires who represent the romantic image of the loner artists taken to the next level, unable to be part of society even if they wanted to. Only Lovers both revels in that notion and underscores its isolation. From the dark vision of Detroit to the eerie soundtrack, the movie creates a world all its own. (Bijou Metro)

DON'T PIGEONHOLE JOHN

When hard-pressed to describe Pigeon John's sound, I choose “soul-rap” — living somewhere between early Jackson 5 and Stevie Wonder (hard to listen to and not smile) and uplifting indie West Coast hip hop. When I say uplifting, I don't mean that John Dunkin (his given name) is an average “conscious” rapper spewing bumper-sticker aphorisms; Pigeon John is far from milquetoast. Following the long tradition of blues, soul and R&B singers before him, Dunkin's gritty rhymes help you dance your troubles away.

“Hip hop is still beautiful and young and sharp and funny and disrespectful — you know, everything that rock 'n' roll is supposed to be,” Dunkin says via press release.

For example, on “Boomerang” from Pigeon John's 2014 release Encino Man, he raps like a bluesman over a rolling electro-backbeat: “I got a girl in Portland/I got her singing songs/ She says she loves me and she'll kill me if I'm doing wrong.” Elsewhere, “All The Roads” is a sweet, almost synth-pop love song in which John sings as well as he raps. “Champagne on My Shoes” is straight-up hip hop featuring this clubby couplet: “She raised her butt in the air/Shouted that she don't care.” And John's fondness for vintage soul and rock 'n' roll shines through in the boogie-woogie of “What Are We Gonna Do.”

Pigeon John plays with Grayskul and Rafael Vigilante 8 pm Sunday, June 1, at Cozmic; $10 adv., $12 door. — William Kennedy

ANYONE CAN BE A POODLE

It's tough to convey unbridled enthusiasm via email, but Trevor Straub of Pookie and The Poodlez (of Oakland, Calif.) comes close: "Yeah, I can do that!!!!!!!!!!!!!!," Straub responds to my email interview request.

"I'm Pookie and my band's The Poodlez," Straub continues. "The Poodlez are always changing, anyone can be a Poodle!"

What's behind the band's distinctive name?

"There's a seriously long story that's really deep that would touch the hearts and farts of all humans but it's too long," Straub says.

His hyperactive chatter fits The Poodlez sound perfectly, like the Ramones and the Beach Boys in a blender, or John Waters' garish vision of '50s America mixed with a Voodoo Doughnut sugar-crash — all the songs from Pookie's 2013 self-titled release on Burger Records clock-in under 2 minutes.

"It's like diet rock," Straub says, describing the band's sound. "Have you ever had a Dr. Pepper? Our live show's more like Pepsi with lime." He continues, "Last time I was in Eugene a Street Fighter game ate my quarters and I ate a bacon cheeseburger on an English muffin. This time I'm here to kiss some boyz!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!"

Buckle up, Eugene.

Behavior Castle presents Pookie and The Poodlez 7:30 pm Wednesday, June 4, at a top-secret location. Email behaviorcastle@gmail.com for details; $3-$5 donation. — William Kennedy

ON PLANET MEAT MACHINE

We welcome you all, to a world where no paper currency exists, no dreams of the afterlife are sought after and everyone is together, striving to form a unified consciousness.

That's not a snippet of The Communist Manifesto, but the opening line to the comic book Bustin' Jieber vs. The Gravy Robbers. The local goof-punk jazzers of Bustin' Jieber are releasing their latest, a concept album of the same name, via digital download code only available through purchase of the band's 30-page Kurt Vonnegutian space odyssey. It continues:

It is a society where musicians are a respected elite, and are true guardians of the vibe, and a society where everything is just gravy. We welcome you to the Meat Machine.

The tight-knit trio that makes up the contemporary jazz-pop outfit — Andy Page on sax, Susan Lucia on drums, Dusty Carlson on bass — are friends first, having met through the social circles of UO School of Music and Dance while studying jazz circa early 2011. The album's concept stems from a shared wackadoo humor and world vision.

"Some of the songs were developed and written out of this distaste for greed," Carlson says while sitting on an amp in the band's tiny practice space — a storage unit out on West 11th. "It takes place on a distant planet called the Meat Machine. The Meat Machine is like a utopia and gravy is the lifeblood. There's enough gravy for everybody and nobody has to work for their gravy."

Of course, there's enough gravy until there isn't: A businessman lands on Meat Machine and cooks up a scheme to horde all the gravy and convince an army of minions that they too can be gravy-rich someday if they put their head down and work hard for him. Sound familiar?

"It's Lord of the Rings meets anti-capitalist social commentary," Page says, laughing. "It's not very veiled."

Instruments are rounded up and hung from the ceiling of a gravy mine, where musicians are forced to extract the brown stuff. Epic music battles ensue. But dispel any preconceived notions of what anti-capitalist music may sound like because Bustin' Jieber vs. The Gravy Robbers is stuffed full of bubbly and hilarious rhythm-heavy pop-jazz tunes like "Jungle Banana" and "Gator Bacon." Bustin' Jieber may be silly as hell, but they have the jazz chops to back it up; think Weird Al meets the Bad Plus.

"The first album we made when we first started is really like a jazz album. There's no vocals on any of the tracks," Page says. "[Bustin' Jieber vs. The Gravy Robbers] is halfway through this transition that we've sort of made as a band. The last couple shows we've been playing are more like rock shows than jazz shows."

The band describes the six tracks on this album as closer to lyrically driven short-form pop songs.

"People will actually stay and listen to you," Lucia says of the new direction, laughing.

Bustin' Jieber is already planning for their next concept album, a rock opera, but don't expect it out soon. Bustin' Jieber vs. The Gravy Robbers took well over a year due to finances and the band members' other projects: Page plays sax with the Cherry Poppin' Daddies, Lucia plays drums in Human Ottoman and Portland's MarchFourth Marching Band and Carlson contracts out for bass gigs while pursuing his jazz masters at the UO.

Find out the fate of planet Meat Machine when Bustin' Jieber plays (and acts out) their music quest for the album release party at Sam Bond's.

Bustin' Jieber plays with Eleven Eyes 9:30 pm Saturday, May 31, at Sam Bond's; $5.

Wandering Goat brings lo-fi dance-punk group Mrs. Howl from Seattle 9 pm Friday, May 30. Mrs. Howl, originally from San Antonio, Texas, describes themselves as "Elastica, cross them with Blondie, add dance beats and big, catchy guitar licks — then sprinkle in a little Cajun flavoring."

EVOLUTIONARY THEATER

The Very Little Theater puts its own spin on Inherit the Wind

According to the National Survey of High School Biology Teachers, 13 percent of American high school bio teachers explicitly teach creationism in the classroom. Sixty percent give evolution very little class time and 17 percent don't even touch the subject at all, wanting to avoid the whole controversy. These statistics speak to the state of radical religious interference with education, which gives a '50s play new relevance in the 21st century.

Inherit the Wind is a fictionalized retelling of the 1925 Scopes Monkey Trial, in which high school biology teacher John Scopes is tried and convicted for teaching evolution. Vivid public figures such as William Jennings Bryan, Clarence Darrow and H.L. Mencken took part in the trial, lending it a dramatic air that was destined to become theater. But writers Jerome Lawrence and Robert Edwin Lee were interested in more than just monkeys and their descendants; the play debuted in 1955, amidst rabid McCarthyism and the authors used the trial as a vehicle to criticize McCarthy's anti-communist witch hunts. "It's not about science versus religion. It's about the right to think," Lawrence noted.

Chris McVay, who is clearly aware of the current relevance of the play, directs the Very Little Theatre's production of Inherit the Wind. "The fact that the themes of science vs. religious dogma (creationism or intelligent design) and the place of individual rights in society are profoundly relevant today, nearly 60 years after this play was written, gives Inherit the Wind a contemporary universality," McVay says. "This play is about the dignity of every individual mind, the right to think, speak and, in this case, teach ideas that may go against traditional accepted thinking and even the law."

McVay has put together a cast that includes Chris Pinto, Bill Campbell, Zachary Twardowski, Tony Stirpe, Mike Hawkins and several other well-known performers about town. I'm interested to see the spin they put on this classic piece.

The most powerful resource any of us possess is our attention. Inherit the Wind offers a chance to turn our gaze once again to the folly of allowing fear to set any agenda, educational or political. ■

Inherit the Wind runs at The Very Little Theatre May 30 – June 14; $12-$17.

WIGGLY TAILS DOG RESCUE

Helping abandoned and surrendered dogs find their forever homes

Fergie is a sweet little 5 year old, 5 lb. girl. She is a bit timid, but once she warms up, she's very playful & fun. She would do best in an adult only home with a mama as her main caregiver.

She is fine with other dogs, but would rather have her mama all to herself. This is one sweet little girl!

Come to our fundraiser garage sale: Muddy Paws Pet Parlor, 1025 River Rd, Sun 06/15. 10am-4pm. Funds will go towards dental surgeries for our adoptable senior furkids!

Foster homes are always needed, please contact us through our Facebook page.

Even with blurred vision Kenai will look to you for companionship, security and love. Looking back you'll witness no less adoration and loyalty than if he could see you clearly. Soaring tennis balls and paths spread out before him will be a blur as the two of you seek adventure, but he'll follow you nonetheless. Will you be the one to take the lead and see Kenai's future for him? It only takes one to guide the way, but two to form a friendship — one that will last a lifetime. Call 1st Avenue Shelter at (541) 844-1777 to learn more about Kenai and make an appointment to meet the one that is waiting to be two with you. You're invited to a Kitten Shower! FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): "When I was young," wrote French author Albert Camus, "I expected people to give me more than they could — continuous friendship, permanent emotion." That didn't work out so well for him. Over and over, he was awash in disappointment. "Now I have learned to expect less of them than they can give," he concluded. "Their emotions, their friendship and noble gestures keep their full miraculous value in my eyes; wholly the fruit of grace." I'd love to see you make an adjustment like this in the coming months, Aries. If you do, the astrological omens suggest you will experience a blessing like Camus'.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some earthquakes happen in slow-motion. These rare events occur 22 to 34 miles down, where tectonic plates are hotter and gooier. Unlike the sudden, shocking jolts of typical temblors, this gradual variety can take many days to uncoil and never send dishes flying off shelves up here on the Earth's surface. I suspect your destiny will have a resemblance to this phenomenon in the coming months, Taurus. Your foundations will be rustling and rumbling, but they will do so slowly and gently. The release of energy will ultimately be quite massive. The realignment of deep structures will be epic. But there will be no big disturbances or damages.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): I suspect that some night soon you will have a dream of being naked as you stand on stage in front of a big audience. Or maybe not completely naked. There's a strong possibility you will be wearing pink and green striped socks and a gold crown. And it gets worse. In your dream, I bet you will forget what you were going to say to the expectant crowd. Your mouth will be moving but no words will come out. So that's the bad news, Gemini. The good news is that since I have forewarned you, you can now do whatever is necessary to prevent anything resembling this dream from actually occurring in your waking life. So when you are called on to show what you've got and make a splashy impression, you will be well prepared.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): When I slip into a meditative state and seek insight about your future, I have a reverie about a hearty sapling growing out of a fallen tree that's rotting on the forest floor. I see exuberant mushrooms sprouting from a cowpie in a pasture. I imagine compost nourishing a watermelon patch. So what do my visions mean? I'm guessing you're going through a phase of metaphorical death and decay. You are shedding and purging and flushing. In the process, you are preparing some top-notch fertilizer. It won't be ready for a while, but when it is, a growth spurt will begin.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Dear Diary: Almost everything that was possible to change has changed these past 12 months. I am not kidding and I am not exaggerating. Getting just one of my certainties destroyed would have been acceptable; I long ago became accustomed to the gradual chip-chip-chipping away of my secure foundations. But this most recent phase, when even my pretty illusions of stability got smashed, truly set a record. So then why am I still standing strong and proud? Why is it I'm not cowering in the corner muttering to the spiders? Have I somehow found some new source of power that was never available to me until my defenses were totally stripped away? I think I'll go with that theory.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): About 32,000 years ago, squirrels in northeast Siberia buried the fruits of a flowering plant deep in their burrows, below the level of the permafrost. Then a flood swept through the area. The water froze and permanently sealed the fruits in a layer of ice. They remained preserved there until 2007, when they were excavated. A team of scientists got a hold of them and coaxed them to grow into viable plants. Their success has a metaphorical resemblance to a project you will be capable of pulling off during the next 12 months, Virgo. I'm not sure what exact form it will take. A resurrection? A resurrection? A recovery? The revival of a dormant dream? The thawing of a frozen asset or the return of a lost resource?

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): For German physicist Arnold Sommerfeld, the good news was that he was nominated for the Nobel Prize 81 times. The bad news is that he never actually won. Actor Richard Burton had a similar fate. He was nominated for an Academy Award seven times, but never took home an Oscar. If there is anything that even vaguely resembles that pattern in your own life, Libra, the next 12 months will be the most favorable time ever to break the spell. In the next few weeks, you may get a glimpse of how it will unfold.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): "I should have kissed you longer." I hope you won't be replaying that thought over and over again in your imagination three weeks from now. I hope you won't be obsessing on similar mantras, either, like "I should have treated you better" or "I wish I would have listened to you deeper" or "I should have tried harder to be my best self with you." Please don't let any of that happen, Scorpio. I am begging you to act now to make any necessary changes in yourself so that you will be fully ready to give the important people in your life the care they deserve. If you do so, you will be free of regrets later.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): "Longing, what is that? Desire, what is that?" Those are questions Louise Glück asks in her poem "Prism." Does she really not know? Has she somehow become innocent again, free from all her memories of what longing and desire have meant to her in the past? That's what I wish for you right now, Sagittarius. Can you do it? Can you enter into beginner's mind and feel your longing and desire as if they were brand new, just born, as fresh and primal as they were at the moment you fell in love for the first time? If you can manage it, you will bestow upon yourself a big blessing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could really benefit from engaging with a compassionate critic — someone who would gently and lovingly invite you to curb your excesses, heal your ignorance, and correct your mistakes. Would you consider going out in search of a kick-ass guide like that? Ideally, this person would also motivate you to build up your strengths and inspire you to take better care of your body. One way or another, Capricorn, curative feedback will be coming your way. The question is, will you have a hand in choosing it, or will you wait around passively for fate to deliver it? I highly recommend the former.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Now would be an excellent time for you to dream up five new ways to have fun. I'm not suggesting there's anything wrong with your existing methods. It's just that in the next few weeks, life will conspire to help you drop some of your inhibitions and play around more than usual and experience greater pleasure. The best way to cooperate with that conspiracy is to be an explorer on the frontiers of amusement and enchantment. What's the most exciting thing you have always wondered about but never done? What interesting experiment have you denied yourself for no good reason? What excursion or adventure would light up your spontaneity?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Now is an excellent time to transform your relationship with your past. Are you up for a concentrated burst of psychospiritual work? To get the party started, meditate your ass off as you ponder this question: "What fossilized fixations, ancient insults, impossible dreams, and parasitic ghosts am I ready to let go of?" Next, move on to this inquiry: "What can I do to ensure that relaxed, amused acceptance will rule my encounters with the old ways forever after?" Here's a third query: "What will I do with all the energy I free up by releasing the deadweight I had been clinging to?"

HOMEWORK: I dare you to give a compliment to someone you've never praised before. Tell me about it at Freewillastrology.com.

SAVAGE LOVE

BIG ISSUES
BY DAN SAVAGE

I'm a 25-year-old straight guy. Last month, I was in the locker room at my gym. It was 4 a.m., and I was the only one around. I was getting ready to leave, when I noticed someone exiting the showers. He kinda caught me looking (he was very well-endowed), and I quickly turned my head, embarrassed. About 20 seconds later, he came around the corner and said, "Hey, how ya doin'?" He was still naked, and it was obvious that he was wondering if I wanted to try something. [Trust me—he was about 10 or 11 inches now!] I didn't know what to think, so I just got the hell out of there as fast as I could. I've never been with a guy before, but for the past few weeks, I can't stop thinking about it. I kinda wish I hadn't left so fast. I guess I'm really turned on by the size, and curious about maybe trying oral? That's all I'm curious about trying, nothing else. I am way more attracted to girls than guys, but I can't shake these thoughts.

Panic At The Dick, So?

I was wondering what happened to Joey from Friends.

Look, PATDS, you're clearly straight enough to continue identifying as straight. But as you learned in that locker room, to get yourself to straight (or to remain at straight), you have to round yourself down the tiniest bit. [Or round yourself up the tiniest bit. Up, down—depends on how you feel about straight.] But you are now consciously aware that you're more than a little curious about dick, and given the right circumstances (oral-only circumstances) and the right dick (great big dick), you could hit/suck/stroke that. Since that giant 4 a.m. dick wasn't your last chance at dick, PATDS, you didn't miss your only opportunity to explore your bisexual/heteroflexible/man-on-man desires. There are other giant dicks out there. Hell, you might get another chance at that particular dick. The next time an opportunity presents itself—whether you leave that opportunity to chance (another encounter with Mr. Ten or Eleven Inches Now) or create your own opportunities (taking out a few NSA sex ads)—put your very limited interests (oral only) and even more limited experience (none whatsoever) on the table and let the dude decide if he's in (your mouth).

I can orgasm without stimulating my clitoris—but only through anal sex. What gives?

A Nosy Admiring Lass

The Lord giveth, ANAL, and it seems He gave you an amazing superpower. I wouldn't question it too much, lest the Lord peg you for an ingrate and taketh away.

I'm a 25-year-old lesbian, and I live with my partner of two years. My family is coming to visit from Texas, where they are part of a hyperconservative church. I'm not out to my mom. While I want this to be a happy occasion, I'm not willing to hide who I am in my own home. My sister owes me one from when I told our mom—at her request—that she was pregnant because she feared her reaction. I'm considering asking my sister to out me to my mom so that maybe she'll be done screaming and yelling by the time she arrives. I know this is chickenshit, but I also can't bring myself to come out to her. I've tried before and can never summon the courage.

Anxiously Fearing Repulsive And Irrational Diatribes

My advice for you is the same as my advice for all queer kids with crazy, hyperconservative parents: Don't fear their rejection—make them fear yours. Tell your mom you're queer, AFRAID, and then tell her that you won't speak to her or see her if she can't treat you and your partner with respect. Remember: The only leverage an adult child has over her parents is her presence. If your mom treats you like shit, absent yourself. If she's rude to you in your own home, kick her ass out. You're a grown woman, and it's time to stop being scared of mommy.

My boyfriend and I have been together for four years, and we have a great relationship. In the bedroom, I am generally the bottom but I play an equal role during sex—neither dominant nor submissive—and in general, we have great sex. But both of us have things that we like to do that the other is not a big fan of. I enjoy being the bottom, but I like to top as well. My partner, who does not particularly enjoy bottoming, is turned on by the idea of the other person being submissive. Both of us are GGG and willing to explore these things together. But is it okay to put limits on how often this happens? (Me submitting to him, him bottoming for me?) What about striking a deal where each person gives a little? How do we compromise, keep it fun, and keep our GGG status intact?

Quid Pro Quo

What I'm about to propose may seem elaborate, QPQ, but bear this in mind while you read my advice: Marijuana is legal where I live.

Take the average number of times you two have sex in any given month and divide that number in half, then divide it in half again. You each get a stack of red poker chips equal to whatever the third number is plus one blue poker chip. So let's say you guys have sex 12 times a month on average. Half of 12 is six, half of six is three—you each get four chips: three red, one blue. [You still with me? Good. Man, I could use some chips right now myself.] You keep your chips on your nightstand, and your boyfriend keeps his chips on his. On nights when you want to top your boyfriend, you hand him one of your red chips. On nights when he wants you to be submissive, he hands you one of his red chips. If he doesn't want to bottom for you on a night when you hand him a chip, he can veto your red chip by surrendering one of his. Likewise, you can veto one of his red chips by surrendering one of yours. When a veto is played, you default to the sex you have most of the time, i.e., your "regular" sexual routine (which seems to entail you bottoming for him as his equal), and the chip used to veto is forfeit. You each have to use your three red chips in one calendar month—an unused chip doesn't carry over to the next month.

Basically, QPQ, you have three chances per month to top him, and he has three chances per month to dominate you. If he wants to deny you one of your chances to top him, he loses one of his chances to dominate you. You don't have to be submissive when you're not feeling it, and he doesn't have to bottom when he's not feeling it. But if you never agree to submit—if you veto all of his requests—you never get to top him. If he never agrees to bottom, then he never gets to dominate you. And what's the blue chip for? It's a "free veto," a chip you can sacrifice without giving up one of your chances to fuck or dominate the other. So there you go! With the help of legal marijuana, I've turned your compromise into a sexy game. Have fun!

The Original

AMERICAN HEFEWEIZEN

Widmer Brothers Hefe began as an improvisation inspired by brothers Kurt and Rob's love of German style beers. Brewed with golden wheat, Hefe's unique cloudy look, bold flavors and citrus notes defined the American style Hefeweizen. Multiple awards and nearly three decades later, Hefe remains the gold standard.

Prost, to The Original!
